

BRUTE FORCE TWITTER

How to Get 1,000's of Followers Fast & Become a Mini-Celebrity in Weeks

By Richard Bryda
@BigRichB

Richard.bryda@yahoo.com

BruteForceTwitter.com

Disclaimer And Copyright Information

Copyright 2009 Richard Bryda

No part of this publication may be reproduced in whole or in part, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher.

Published by:
Richard Bryda
1060 Krona Court
New Braunfels, TX 78132

While all attempts have been made to provide accurate and verifiable information in this publication, neither the Author nor the Publisher assumes any responsibility for errors, inaccuracies or omissions. Any slights of people or organizations are unintentional. This publication is not intended for use as a source of legal or accounting advice. The Publisher and Author make no promise or representation that you will make a certain amount of money, or any money, or not lose money, as a result of using our products and services. The use of this publication should be based on your own due diligence and you agree that the Publisher/Author are not liable for your success or failure.

INTRODUCTION:

If you're looking to climb up into Twitter's elite, then you've made a wise purchase. I'm about to share with you the fastest, most time efficient, and easiest ways to get a lot of followers on Twitter.

First off. Mass following does work to get a lot of followers, but it's totally inefficient and takes forever. However, once you blow past the 2,000 level, you can no longer do mass follows. You're only allowed to follow 10% more people than the amount of followers you have.

So mass following isn't really an option. What you need is a variety of laser-targeted tactics to efficiently convert the people you do follow. Since you have limited open slots to follow people, this efficiently allows you to work within those parameters.

Here are the best of the best tactics that I've personally used to go from about 1,400 followers on December 23 to 74,200 followers as of the time I'm writing this, March 17th.

In less than 7 weeks, I went from a Twitter nobody to ranked #59 at <http://twitterholic.com> out of millions of people. Because Twitter has recently implemented a system of "suggested users" to promote famous people to newbies just joining Twitter, I've fell back to a ranking of around #95 as of now.

Getting on that suggested users list usually helps those that are on it to get upwards of 5,000 new followers a day. Without being on that list, I've used my system and gotten as many as 2,200 new followers on some days.

So to put it simply, I'm the best of the best when it comes to racking up followers for us nobodies.

Now, I want you to test out these tactics for yourself and see how easy it is to add thousands of followers every week. You can do this in as little as 15-20 minutes a day.

I personally use these tactics in 3-5 minutes bursts throughout the day when I get a chance.

I'm now going to give you my tactics and reasons behind them. I'll also share other tips that aren't necessarily about getting followers (yet they're very important).

READ ALL OF THIS. The 5-Minute Feeder Loop is the most important thing in this guide for getting followers fast and without having to spend all day at your computer, but you need to understand everything else that goes with it.

Enjoy,

Richard Bryda
@BigRichB

PS. Don't forget to follow me. ☺

The Crown Jewel “FSF” Tactic

The “FSF” stands for Following Spammer’s Followers. This relates to my sales letter bullet point where I say “Why I think spammers are great for Twitter... the Twitter purists will hate me for saying this, but that’s ok...”

I’m sure you’ve seen spammers all over Twitter. Well, they’re awesome as far as I’m concerned. The reason is simple. I hijack their followers for my own followers.

Think about it. If someone is willing to follow a spammer, either they pretty much automatically follow anyone or they don’t have high standards for following someone.

They’re easy pickings. This is the low-hanging fruit.

So whenever you see a spammer, follow their followers.

You can tell who a spammer is by them using someone’s famous name and spoofing it. For example, say they target Perry Belcher whose real Twitter account is @PerryBelcher. So they’ll do something like @PerryABelcher, @PerryCBelcher, @PerryHBelcher, etc.

They take the person’s name and put a picture of him up without permission. They then make 1-2 updates with a link in them. That’s it. 1-2 updates and they’re done. Then they start mass following people until they get suspended and deleted from Twitter.

Here’s an update I took from a spammer...

“5 Steps to twitter success” was just released! I highly recommend it
**link****

They’re just there to sucker you into clicking the link and buying whatever junk it is they’re trying to affiliate sell. Nothing more.

Regardless... the people start flooding in as their followers. Pay attention and follow them as soon as possible.

I usually don't do this for, but when it comes to spammers, I follow all of their followers. I go through their whole list.

I notice that spammers who quickly max out their 2,000 following slots get about 85-90 followers per hour. So be aware.

The “RFF” Tactic

What this stands for is Recent Follower’s Followers. I normally get about 80-110 followers an hour (except overnight)... when I’m working my system. So I can simply watch my new followers flood in.

But what I do is I keep refreshing my follower’s list. So once a new follower comes in, I immediately go to their follower’s list and follow their 5 most recent followers.

Basically, I’m betting that those 5 people are in a “following mood” and are online or recently online. So in a short time, they’ll end up following me as well.

A stupid mistake I made that cost me an estimated 10,500 new followers (beyond what I got) over the first 7 weeks of using my tactics

The mistake. I got cute and put a picture of me shirtless, flexing my back. Look, when I got on Twitter, I was just messing around. I didn't know what to expect. I kinda thought Twitter was stupid, so I just threw up any picture.

Since I like to be different and my back is big, I put that picture up. BIG MISTAKE.

Although I did rack up tons of followers, I also offended quite a few. Some people take Twitter a little more serious than me. Others are just downright uptight.

Regardless, when I switched to a normal face picture, I noticed an immediate and noticeable jump in how many followers I get and the conversions.

I estimate that if I had just put my face picture up right away, in those first 7 weeks of testing out these tactics, I would have netted an extra 10,500 new followers (above and beyond the tens of thousands I already got).

So the lesson is simple. Just put up a normal face picture of yourself if you want to get the most out of working this system.

How I Choose Who to Follow

Ok, here's my theory. I look for what I call 'feeders'. These are people who will feed me their followers. You can't choose just any person to follow their followers.

If you take the followers of a celebrity, say like Shaq or Lance Armstrong... well, the chances are they won't convert good into your followers. Who knows why people will follow Shaq. Shaq and other celebrities are 'twitter snobs'. They don't follow many people.

So whoever follows them knows they pretty much won't be followed back. So they have a strong motive to follow the celebrity.

However, if you're a twitter nobody like me, they don't have that strong incentive to follow you even at the prospect of you following them back

So the type of feeder you want to look for is an aggressive follower (people who max out the number of people they can follow). That's first off.

The reason. I want these types of people feeding me their followers is because those people are actively finding followers and not just sitting back waiting for them to come.

So for example... a person who has 40,000 followers is allowed to follow no more than 44,000 people. That's the maximum because that's 10% above the number of followers they have.

So keep an eye out for people like that. Look for people who follow more people than are following them.

Next... a feeder needs to get a lot of followers daily and consistently. You can track that by going to twittercounter.com or twitterholic.com to see the daily changes. It's not always accurate, but it gives you a good idea on who's aggressively moving up.

After that, I look for feeders who have stupid profiles... a bad picture, a bad bio, and/or uninspiring updates. The reason: Because if someone is willing to follow that nonsense, then they should have no problem following me.

I'll give you the perfect example of a feeder that I've actually used. Go to twitter and do a search for @eleesha

Her picture is average. That's not why I picked her though. She gets a ton of followers in spite of her dumb profile and stupid updates. I consider myself more interesting and fun than her. So why wouldn't most of her followers follow me?

Most of her followers follow her for 1 reason... she followed them first. She's an aggressive follower. So basically, look for people like her. She's always following way more people than follow her.

Except for @mrtweet don't waste your time following any of the followers of the people in the top 80 on twitter. They will convert poorly into your followers.

You have a limited amount of slots, so you can't be wasting them on those types of gambles.

So what you do is you go to your feeders' follower lists and follow ONLY the 1st page of them. I usually do this with about 10 feeders and it takes me 3-5 minutes each time I do it.

I spread this out and do it AT LEAST 5 times a day... so it takes me no longer than 15-25 minutes everyday. I talk more about this in the "Feeder Loop" section.

One last thing, I @BigRichB am an awesome person to use as a feeder. I almost always get over 1,000 followers a day and I'm just a regular person. This translates into a high % of my followers becoming your followers.

(UPDATE NOTE: Twitter has been having some technical problems as of mid-March, so I decided to take about 10 days off from using my system because of that and creating this website. That's why if you look at twittercounter.com you'll see I kinda stalled at 75,000 followers. That's only temporary.)

I've had over 5 people test me out as a feeder and all of them get high rates of conversions from my followers.

(SIDE NOTE: This system works for everyone. I've gone into 4 other Twitter accounts and ran my system for them. Some of them get even better results than me.)

“Quick Hitter” Tactic

Ok, this is where I just hang around looking at my twitter page and all my followers' updates. When I see a follower do an @ message to someone within the last minute, I immediately click on that person's name and check for 2 things.

1. I check to see if they're online
2. I check to see if they follow about the same number of people that are following them

If they meet those 2 criteria, I follow that person. There's a good chance they'll follow you within 10-15 minutes.

I keep refreshing my twitter page and repeatedly doing that for however long I feel like it.

I do this a lot while I'm actively talking to others and making updates.

Long Tail Follower Thread

Ok, this takes the Quick Hitter one step further. After I click the follow button for that person who got an @ message from 1 of my followers, I check to see who they're having conversations with RIGHT THEN AND NOW. If anyone, then I click on that person's name and see if they meet the 2 criteria I just listed above.

If so, I add them. As you can see by the video that demonstrates this, what I'm doing is jumping from 1 person to another. Then I jump from that person to another they're talking to. Etc.

The Most Important Thing to Look for When Following Someone... the “Big Idea” Behind Following

I kinda already got into this, but I want to stress this so I made it separate. The main point of my system for getting new followers revolves around 1 MAIN THING. What is it?

You're looking for targeted people who are online CURRENTLY. Again, because you have limited open slots to follow people, you need them to not only convert to your followers at a high % but you also need them to follow you fast so you can free up that slot they were in for someone new.

So you go to your feeders and follow only their most recent followers. You can follow anywhere from their top 5 most recent followers up to the whole 1st page of their new followers.

I base this off of conversions. If the feeder converts a high % of his/her followers into my followers, I'll follow more of their most recent followers even if they're not currently online.

If a feeder is just getting tons of new followers pouring in, I'll follow their first 2 pages of followers.

Best and Usually the Only Time you Should Mass Follow

I like to keep slots open during the day so I can have flexibility to add new followers using my tactics. So the best time I consider for mass following and maxing out all your follower slots is right before you go to bed at night.

You want each slot working for you. Don't leave any bullets in the chamber. Empty it out. You'll have about 8 hours of twitter dead time while you sleep. So pretty much the best thing you can do is throw a bunch of crap on the wall (follow as many people as possible) and hope some of it sticks while you're sleeping.

I call this... "closing out the books each night".

Deleting Non-followers and More on My “Grocery Store” Slotting System

I consider my slotting system like how grocery stores slot their shelf space. If the slot isn't producing (person isn't following me), they have to go. It's as simple as that. I don't have the time or patience to deal with a 1-sided arrangement.

I will tell you... I'm pretty aggressive when it comes to unfollowing non-followers. Within 2 days, if you're not following me back, I'll unfollow you.

I figure this. If in 2 days you haven't followed me, either you have no intention of following me, you're not online at Twitter enough to even matter, or you don't pay attention to following people back.

Regardless, you're gone.

The reason why I unfollow like this is because I don't want my non-followers all spread out. They have to be packed in front of a Wall of Followers.

I don't want to have to go through each and every page of the people I'm following to check to see if they're following me or not.

So I do a “backwards unfollow” on non-followers. I go pages deep into the list of people I'm following and start deleting non-followers. For example... say I start on page 100. Any non-followers on that page... I delete. Then I click to page 99 and do the same. Etc... I keep moving the Wall closer and closer to page 1.

When I say the wall, what I mean is that everyone beyond that point is following me. I use socialtoo.com to auto-follow and auto-unfollow. So if someone follows me, it will automatically follow that person. If someone follows me but then unfollows me, then they'll automatically get unfollowed by me through socialtoo.

I don't have to worry about it. So all I have to worry about are the people who never followed me in the 1st place.

Anyway, I'm basically targeting the people who I followed 1.5-2 days ago for deletion while leaving the people I recently followed alone.

The thing is you need some sort of guide on how to do this. I use a wall of followers as the guide. Anyone beyond that wall is a follower. So I don't have to bother checking through them. The wall can be anything and anywhere you want.

I had a wall somewhere between pages 25 and 40 when I had between 2,000 and 4,000 followers. Since I had a limited amount of free slots to follow new people, I was more aggressive.

So I'd go to that wall at say page 30 and start unfollowing people from there... going next to page 29, then page 28, etc.

There were times I would give people just 8 hours to follow me. If they didn't, I'd unfollow them. Between 2,000 and 4,000 followers is the hardest time to acquire new followers because of the 10% limit of open slots to follow people beyond your number of followers.

So aggressive following and non-following is highly recommended here.

But as I got to over 20,000 followers, I relaxed a bit more and gave people more time to follow me. I allowed them 2 days to follow me before getting rid of them.

I did this because I had 2,000 slot openings. That was plenty to work with. Plus, the hard part isn't clicking on people to follow... its deleting non-followers. That's the time consuming part. So I was also minimizing my time commitment by doing this.

In a bit, I'm going to tell you about a super-advanced technique I recently discovered that makes deleting off non-followers totally easy while allowing you to maximize the # of people you follow each day. I call it the "Revolving Door" procedure.

Best and worst times to be online getting followers

Through simple observation, I noticed that the best times during the week to get followers are 9-11:30pm and 10am – 1:45pm EST (eastern standard time).

The worse times for the whole week are during the late afternoon and early dinner times... 4-7pm EST.

But by far, the best time to get followers is on the weekends... especially ALL DAY Sunday.

The 5-Minute “Feeder Loop” Tactic

This is the main tactic I use for getting most of my followers. First, I find good feeders by what I mentioned above... finding people who get a lot of followers, who aggressively follow people to induce those people to follow them back, and people who are not famous.

Those are usually my best feeders. A lot of times I can convert 40% of their most recent followers into my followers within 1 hour when following only their most recent followers.

Now, I go and look for at least 10 of these people to feed me their leads (new followers). I test them out to see how well their new followers convert to my followers.

If they convert well, then I take that feeder and put him or her in my favorites list. I just star 1 of their recent posts to do that. And I do that with the other 9+ feeders as well.

So now I have all the people who give me their followers in 1 place... my favorites list. This makes it nice and organized for when you run the system.

From there, I start with the 1st person, add their 1st page of followers. Then I go to the 2nd and repeat. I keep going until I've done all 10 like that.

It takes 3-5 minutes each time you do that LOOP.

From there, wait at least 10 minutes before you do another loop. If you're not busy and super aggressive, you can do this every 10 minutes for an hour for as long as you want while you talk on Twitter.

If you're pressed for time, just do the 10 person feeder loop once for the 3-5 minutes and come back 2 hours later to repeat. Do this for a total of 5 times each day.

So what I want you to do right now is to go to my favorites list @BigRichB and check out the people you see on there. Besides using me as a feeder, you may want to use some of my feeders as well.

(NOTE: You don't have to follow them for them to be a feeder.) I regularly put spammers in my favorites list, but I NEVER follow them since they'll get suspended and it would take up 1 of my following slots.

Now, a lot of times I rotate people in and out as feeders due to testing. But I consistently have at least 10 people feeding me their followers.

I kinda think of this Feeder Loop tactic as the CNN Headline News Loop... since that's what they do there... they loop the news and keep rotating it in and out constantly.

The most important video I've included is the 5-minute feeder loop video.

Most important piece of computer equipment

For speed, you need a mouse. If you're on a laptop, you gotta get a USB mouse. You simply won't be able to add followers and delete non-followers fast enough without using a mouse.

Having a mouse will save you hours every week if you're using a laptop to do this stuff.

This isn't ground-breaking news, but it'll save you a lot of time. Nobody wants to spend all day at Twitter.

Ride the Wave

I've gotten 400+ followers in 90 minutes or less a few times by just riding a wave. What does this mean? It means that 1 of my feeders is going crazy... getting a ton of followers.

So I'll just sit there and constantly refresh his/her follower list and add them almost instantly.

It's as easy as that. If you're wondering what techniques they use to get that many followers so quickly, I'm actually going to share it with you in a bonus at the end of this ebook... it's called the "Slingshot Method".

I personally don't use it because you have to be an A-Hole to use this method. But I'll include it for informational purposes in the bonus below.

Good and Bad Twitter Neighborhoods

Ok, this has to do with who you follow. When you're going through your deletions of non-followers, you'll sometimes see 1-2 pages where not 1 person has followed you back.

That's a Bad Neighborhood. It means you're following people from a bad, poor-converting feeder. You need to find out which feeder that is and get rid of that person.

The only thing that feeder is doing is clogging up your free slots with people who are unwilling to follow you. It's not a good fit. Poor conversions ruin everything since this system is based off of high converting people who follow you ASAP due to them being currently online.

Obviously a Good Neighborhood is the opposite. You can go pages deep into who you're following and you'll see that almost the whole page of people has followed you.

Whoever is feeding you those people is awesome and you need to consider following more than the 1st page of that person's follower list.

Why I'm happy to be blocked at least 25 times a day

Look, some people are going to notice you're following them and they won't follow you back. So you'll unfollow them. Well, there's a good chance you're going to follow them again sometime soon because you'll pick them up from another feeder.

Well, they're going to see you once again on their follower list. If this happens a few times, a lot of people will get annoyed and block you.

That's cool. What just happened is that this person who won't follow you just freed up a slot for you. Since once they block you, you can't mistakenly follow them again. So the slot won't be wasted on them.

Now you're thinking, I won't make that mistake. I'll remember those people I previously followed who didn't follow me back.

For a few you will.

For most, you won't. When you get into the thousands of followers and you're flying through the 5-minute Feeder Loop, you're not really paying attention to Twitter usernames and pictures when you're following people.

I glance only briefly at a few things when considering who I follow. Does the person have a picture or avatar? If not, I won't follow them usually. My reason... they're lazy and not really dedicated to Twitter.

So why take a chance on following them. Now sometimes I do click on the profiles of these people who don't have pictures. If I see that the person is active on Twitter, then I may add them.

Now here's a big tip. If I see that the person has NO updates and no real bio, yet they have a lot of followers... I immediately add their followers.

This goes back to the spammers. If people are willing to follow a person WITHOUT a picture and WITHOUT even 1 update, then they'll pretty much follow anyone (including you).

So you might as well pick off this these "low hanging fruit" followers.

Now, to be honest I'm not happy HAPPY about being blocked, but I don't care because it kinda benefits me. I've noticed that since I changed from using my back picture to using my face picture that I've been blocked a lot less often.

By the way, I'm going to send you a follow-up email that shows you how you can follow thousands of people without ever following the same person twice. It's pretty cool and makes things even more efficient for you.

The BRUTE FORCE HYPER FOLLOW TACTIC

What I do here is I completely unfollow everyone who hasn't followed me back. Then I go do my feeder loop. I go 10 pages deep into each feeder's list of followers... following everyone on there.

So if you count that, that's at least 10 feeders and 10 pages with 20 people on each page. It's possible that I can follow up to 2,000 people by doing this. (Usually there is some overlap in followers from each feeder's list so it's more likely that you'll end up following a 1,000 new people.)

This will take about 15 minutes to do. The end result... followers come pouring in.

The Revolving Door Procedure

This is an advanced combo technique for adding new followers and deleting out non-followers.

What I do is I open 2 windows on Twitter. 1 window will be me on my favorites list where my feeders are sitting. The other window will be on the list of people I'm following.

So I'll add people while doing my 5-minute loop feeder technique on my favorite list page. After I do that, I immediately close that window and go to the window where I'm following people.

I'll click back through my pages until I come up to the wall of my followers. From that wall, I will start deleting backwards anyone who isn't following me

To give you an idea, when I had 37,000 followers, I'd have to go back to page 225 to hit my wall of followers. Then from page 225, I start deleting non-followers.

So it goes 225, 224, 223, 222, 221, etc. So I'll go through about 25-50 pages of these looking to delete anyone who isn't following me back.

After that, I close that window and go back to my favorites list window to start adding a few hundred new people. Before I do that, I refresh my favorites list page.

I keep jumping back and forth between the windows like this. Always refresh once you jump to the new window. You'll see that by adding new people to follow that your wall will be pushed back. So you'll need to find it again. It should be anywhere from 5-20 pages behind the page you left off at.

So anyone who is spying on me won't really see any action because I keep deleting a few hundred people and immediately adding a new few hundred people. So it all looks the same unless they pay close attention.

(Note: Because it takes forever to delete these non-followers due to you having to click through each page, I suggest you keep 2 windows open and do this whenever possible).

Since you're going to wait at least 10 minutes to do another loop, you can take that 10 minutes of dead time and unfollow people in the 2nd window.

Testing Conversions

To properly run a 1-hour follower conversion test on feeders, this is what you do. Using all 10 feeders, do the 5-minute loop over and over and over again for 1 hour non-stop.

Make note at how many people you were following to begin with. Then after you're 1 hour of adding people is up, note how many people you're now following. Whatever the difference is, those are the people you will be tracking for this 10 feeder conversion test.

Wait 1 hour after you've finished and go back to your following list. Simply count up how many of those people are now your followers.

If you have good feeders, you should normally have somewhere around 20-25% of those people as followers an hour later.

If you want to be more thorough, you can do this with 1 feeder at a time. Be sure that when you do this to only track it on people who you follow and are currently online since if you add a bunch of people who aren't currently online, that will throw off the results since they won't be able to follow you back within that hour.

Other Important Info

- When looking for feeders, it's best to look at people who rank between 80-300 on twitterholic.com or twittercounter.com... be sure you choose only the people who are aggressive followers.
- A technique that I invented but no longer use is that I'd follow, unfollow, and then re-follow spammers regularly. This puts you at the top of their follower list where other people will see you. You're more likely to be followed when at the top of peoples' follower lists. I see people doing this a lot. They target people like me who get a lot of followers and they'll follow, unfollow, and re-follow me to get at the top of my list... hoping people go to my follower's list and add my followers to who they're following. I consider this shady so I don't use it on other people who follow me back.
- If you do check profiles and see a person isn't following a lot of people, you probably don't want to follow that person. The reason: If you post a lot of updates, you'll flood their twitter page with your posts and this may annoy them. They'll then unfollow you. So if someone is following less than 100 people, it may be a good idea not to follow them.
- A trick to get a lot of engagement from your followers and to get more followers is to ask open-ended questions. I ask a lot of questions that require just 1-2 word replies. This gets tons of responses. It engages the people and helps you to form a bond with them. But also... the more people who respond, the more people will see you because you'll be at the top of many peoples' updates lists.
- I touched on this before, but I want to make this clear. Before you go to bed, make sure you're following the maximum number of people allowed.
- Note... the more aggressive you recycle out non-followers and follow new people, the faster you'll get new followers. A side benefit to doing this is that you'll be at the top of a lot of followers lists which will catch the eye of other people so they can follow you
- Outsourcing... you can outsource these tactics to someone in the Philippines for about $1 an hour. If they were to work for you for 10 hours a day, everyday for a month, that'll cost you $300. For that $300, you should have at least 15,000 new followers for the month if they got JUST 50 followers per hour (that's very conservative since I normally average around 110 new followers per hour). You can always negotiate daily minimums, etc. As an upsell, I'm offering to do this for you as well for $300 a month. But since my time is limited, I can only do this for 10 people total.

- Mentioned this earlier, but it bears repeating. When I see a profile with no picture and no updates... I immediately add their followers. Sometimes only the 1st page, sometimes every single follower.
- Spammers who quickly max out there 2,000 slots for following people usually get 85-90 followers per hour for a few hours. So watch for spammers and throw them up in your favorites list as a temporary feeder
- Anytime you see someone who is getting a lot of followers fast, pay attention to see if a lot of those followers DON'T have pictures... or watch to see if there are a lot of followers who have locked updates... if you see either or both of these, don't use them as a feeder. Avoid their followers.
- I've gotten about 16,000 new followers in 19 days on Twitter early on using my system. It's taken me 8+ months to get 16,000 people onto 1 of my email lists. It took me lots of time and lots of money to build that email list. It took me very little time and absolutely no money to build the Twitter list. Although it's comparing apples to oranges, it's still something to consider.
- You can get a lot of followers by putting out some really good info or a good joke because people will retweet that. I personally don't do this, but I know it works for other people
- How do I know which of my feeders is converting people into my followers? I go immediately to my followers list and click on the people who recently followed me. I look to see which feeder is below me on their follower list. Whoever I see, that's the person who I picked up the follower from

BONUS: The SlingShot Method (How to get 6,000 new followers in as little as 3 days)

I've seen this happen 3 times by 2 different people. I won't reveal who they are though, since I consider them idiots for doing this.

First off, these people had at least 15,000 followers at the times that they did this tactic.

I'll give you the numbers for the last time this happened. The guy had 22,000 followers. So this allowed him the ability to follow 24,200 people... 10% above the number of followers he had.

So what he did was he unfollowed over 9,000 people he was following... most of those people were actually following him too. So he screwed those people over by suckering them to follow him. Then hoped they wouldn't notice when he unfollowed them and quickly added a new 9,000 people to follow. So if you saw his profile day to day, it'd look the same.

How do I know this? Because I was 1 of the followers he did this to... TWICE. He followed me, got me to follow him back, then unfollowed me.

Anyway, so he got down to following about 15,000 of the 22,000 people who are following him. By doing this, he effectively opened up 9,200 new slots (since he had 24,200 slots) to fill with new people.

So what he did was he reloaded and slingshot up, following thousands of new people in 1 day. By the time he got up to his limit of 24,200 people to follow, he'd already added a few thousand new followers... which opened up a few thousand more slots he could fill. Within 3 days, he had 28,000 followers and was following about 28,000 people.

So he added 6,000 new ones.

If you were a follower of his and not paying attention, it'd look like the 28,000 people he follows are people who are following him since they're about equal numbers. But they're not.

He's using an advanced slotting system... although one that screws over people who follow him.

Say I have 40,000 followers... which gives me 44,000 open slots to play with. I could effectively unfollow all 40,000 of those people and then add a new 44,000 people.

Think about it.

How many of those new people that I'm following do you think I could convert into my followers? Probably over 10,000 in a few days.

So by the time I'm done, I could have 50,000 followers and be following 50,000 people.

But of those 50,000 people, only the last 10,000 I'll be following back... the new people. I effectively now have 40,000 slots working to get new followers instead of the 4,400 slots (if I were to follow everyone that follows me).

I'm just including this tactic for informational purposes. I don't use it and I hope you don't either since you don't need to be an idiot to get a lot of followers.

CONCLUSION:

What I want you to do now is to go and listen to the audio interview I did and then watch the videos in order. Once you've done that, get going with my system.

If you have any questions, you can send them to my personal email address:
Richard.bryda@yahoo.com

I'm going to send you emails to keep you up-to-date with Twitter.

I'm not going to overload you with emails. So don't worry. The emails I send to you will contain unadvertised bonuses (no, not filler info, it'll be useful), frequently asked questions answered, as well as any information I think you'll find useful so that you can get the most out of Twitter.

I thank you for getting Brute Force Twitter. Consider it a long-term investment because Twitter is at the cutting edge of social media... and social media is the future of online business.

Sincerely,

Richard Bryda
BruteForceTwitter.com
@BigRichB